

Wine Enthusiast

Mata Vermouth Blanco

“The Mata family had produced vermouth in Málaga since the early 1900s until they sold their winery in 1970. Today, Patrick Mata, a New York-based wine importer, has revived his family’s business, basing it in Bierzo. This vermouth melds sweet mandarin and apricot flavors with scents of thyme and saffron. The touch of sweetness is balanced by black-tea bitterness on the finish. Try this on the rocks with a twist of orange.”

Wine Enthusiast

Mata Vermouth Blanco

“The Mata family had produced vermouth in Málaga since the early 1900s until they sold their winery in 1970. Today, Patrick Mata, a New York-based wine importer, has revived his family’s business, basing it in Bierzo. This vermouth melds sweet mandarin and apricot flavors with scents of thyme and saffron. The touch of sweetness is balanced by black-tea bitterness on the finish. Try this on the rocks with a twist of orange.”

Wine Enthusiast

Mata Vermouth Blanco

“The Mata family had produced vermouth in Málaga since the early 1900s until they sold their winery in 1970. Today, Patrick Mata, a New York-based wine importer, has revived his family’s business, basing it in Bierzo. This vermouth melds sweet mandarin and apricot flavors with scents of thyme and saffron. The touch of sweetness is balanced by black-tea bitterness on the finish. Try this on the rocks with a twist of orange.”

Wine Enthusiast

Mata Vermouth Blanco

“The Mata family had produced vermouth in Málaga since the early 1900s until they sold their winery in 1970. Today, Patrick Mata, a New York-based wine importer, has revived his family’s business, basing it in Bierzo. This vermouth melds sweet mandarin and apricot flavors with scents of thyme and saffron. The touch of sweetness is balanced by black-tea bitterness on the finish. Try this on the rocks with a twist of orange.”

Wine Enthusiast

Mata Vermouth Blanco

“The Mata family had produced vermouth in Málaga since the early 1900s until they sold their winery in 1970. Today, Patrick Mata, a New York-based wine importer, has revived his family’s business, basing it in Bierzo. This vermouth melds sweet mandarin and apricot flavors with scents of thyme and saffron. The touch of sweetness is balanced by black-tea bitterness on the finish. Try this on the rocks with a twist of orange.”

Wine Enthusiast

Mata Vermouth Blanco

“The Mata family had produced vermouth in Málaga since the early 1900s until they sold their winery in 1970. Today, Patrick Mata, a New York-based wine importer, has revived his family’s business, basing it in Bierzo. This vermouth melds sweet mandarin and apricot flavors with scents of thyme and saffron. The touch of sweetness is balanced by black-tea bitterness on the finish. Try this on the rocks with a twist of orange.”

